Channelling Change

Parents and teachers can find themselves struggling with the intensity of a challenging child and are often advised to moderate that intensity by medication. As a result many children wind up clinically restrained simply because they have not received help that enables them to channel their intensity into creative or cognitive pursuits. Seventy-five percent of all children evaluated for conditions such as ADHD and Oppositional Defiance Disorder receive medication on the very first visit. The unfortunate underlying message is "You need a pill to manage your feelings". Glasser's approach has been proven to bring about change quickly and in an enduring way, without medication. Research has shown that Glasser's approach dramatically reduces difficult behaviour in the classroom, school exclusion, and youth crime.
